

The Shift Awakeness

Your hormones are actively fluctuating. Your body is sending you signals — it's time to adapt your routines and support your nervous system.

YOUR TIPS & TRICKS

- 01 Swap to bamboo or linen bedding for night sweats and temperature swings.
- 02 Add magnesium glycinate in the evening for the 3am cortisol spike.
- 03 Bring in red light or gentle movement to support mood and joints.
- 04 Track your cycle changes — irregularity is data, not something to ignore.
- 05 Talk to your doctor about symptoms now.
- 06 Build one weekly "radical rest" block.

YOUR DAILY MANTRAS

"This is a shift, not a decline."

"My body is recalibrating — I meet it with patience, not panic."

"I am allowed to rest more in this season."

"I am not 'too sensitive' — my hormones are simply changing."

"I advocate for myself, especially in the doctor's office."

"This transition transforms me — it doesn't diminish me."

IN GOOD COMPANY

Michelle Obama has spoken publicly about her own hot flashes and sleep disruption, pushing for perimenopause to be discussed far more openly.
