

The Awakening

This is normal turbulence — but a little proactive support goes a long way right now.

YOUR TIPS & TRICKS

- 01 Swap to a breathable, cool pillowcase if night warmth is new.
- 02 Introduce a wind-down tea ritual to signal bedtime.
- 03 Address breakouts with gentle, dermatologist-formulated products.
- 04 Validate mood swings out loud — hormones can make small things feel huge.
- 05 Add a calming diffuser to her room for the harder weeks.
- 06 Book a check-in with a provider if symptoms feel bigger than "normal."

YOUR DAILY MANTRAS

- "This feeling is temporary, even when it feels huge."*
- "I don't have to have it all figured out today."*
- "It's okay to ask for help when things feel confusing."*
- "My body is not against me."*
- "I am growing into myself, one day at a time."*
- "I deserve patience — especially from myself."*

DID YOU KNOW

Mood swings during hormonal shifts are usually temporary spikes in emotional sensitivity, not a permanent change in who you are. Most girls feel steadier again within a year or so of their cycle settling.
